

Introducing Babel

For our 30th anniversary we are re-issuing Babel, originally designed by Àngel Jové in 1971.

In the poignant, artisan Barcelona of the early 1970s, still under the rule of late Francoism, a fresh, provocative group of artists and architects began to sow the seeds for what after the Spanish transition to democracy by 1977 would turn out to be the multi-colour explosion of modern night time bars, highly commonplace by the early 1980s. Angel Jové was one of these urban conspirators.

The Babel lamp refers to the unfinished biblical tower where there was a confusion of tongues, victims of their ambition. However, this time the perspective is different: the entire robust body is perfectly finished, the tower is complete and shines with insolent convening power. Solely using solid or hollow alabaster was considered an affront to predominant trends at the time. Alabaster was seen as a distasteful material, without the constructive strength of marble or the translucent nobility of onyx, and it was scantily used to create the small dire kitsch sculptures that flourished as a souvenir among the early tourists.

On account of the process of craftsmanship, no two units are identical; however, every single one stands as a clear illustration of an evening tête-à-tête. A spectacular and superbly striking lamp that evokes all manner of secrets, even among the most hush-hush tongues.

About the author

The career of this designer from Lleida is characterized by a liberty and variety of interests that are rare nowadays.

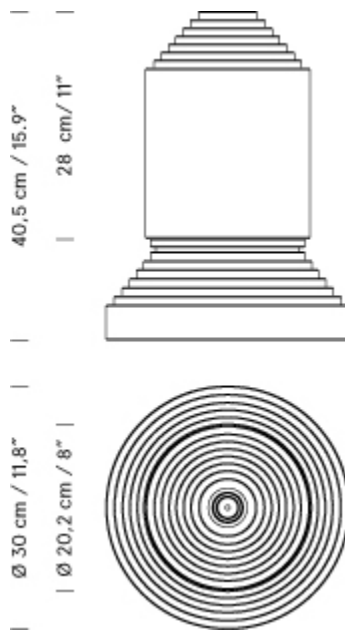

Jové has led the most versatile career: he has been a professor in various design schools; an awarded interior designer; the author of books such as Verbo Ser (Lumen, 1970) or the Tratado de los órdenes arquitectónicos (Tusquets, 1971); he has acted in various movies, like Bilbao (1978), Caniche (1979) and Angustia (1986) by Bigas Luna, or Pasión Lejana (1986) by Jesús Garay; he has worked as a scriptwriter and artistic director in TVE and TV3; he has also been a graphic designer and illustrator; and much more. However, his greatest interest is painting. He has shown his work in many exhibitions since 1961 until nowadays in Lleida and Barcelona, but also in Ottawa, Johannesburg and Berlin, among other cities.

Ángel Jové's work has a backdrop of mystery and nostalgia, in fact he experimented with anti-establishment art, Arte Povera, as a reaction to art marketing, as well as with photographic printing on fabric, photomontage and environments.

This outsider got introduced into the world of design thanks to architect and designer Santiago Roqueta, to contribute with his talent in some objects, such as the Babel and the Zelete lamps, both made of alabaster, which is a material usually considered vulgar, but that is used in this case in order to create a great richness of possibilities. Both lamps caused a major aesthetic impression at the time, an effect that has not diminished with the years.

Excite with simplicity

Founded in 1985 by Nina Masó, Gabriel Ordeig and Javier Nieto, Santa & Cole is an international lighting and furniture brand with Barcelona roots. For the last three decades, Santa & Cole has developed an impressive and enduring catalogue of contemporary and historic lighting by Spanish and internationally recognized designers including Miguel Milá, Antoni Arola and Antoni de Moragas as well as Arne Jacobsen and Ilmari Tapiovaara, among others. The brand works with contemporary designers while also rediscovering significant historical designs and bringing them back to the market.

Santa & Cole's products have a sense of relaxed luxury, quality and durability, aiming to improve our surroundings and daily life. Over eighty designers have contributed to their catalogue to date and their products are known for their understated presence, timeless form, functionality, honest and thoughtfully selected materials. The company works closely with a network of small industrial artisans throughout Barcelona to manufacture each piece in its design catalogue.

Large-scale installations of Santa & Cole's lighting can also be seen at hotels, restaurants and public spaces across Spain, throughout Europe and in the United States. In addition to lighting for commercial and residential interiors, the company has produced a number of design books and has made a significant contribution to urban planning with its innovative outdoor lighting and furniture. Santa & Cole is headquartered in Belloch, just 18 miles north of Barcelona, and distributes its collections globally.
